The author proposes a system using the HUC to identify all information and knowledge which can be reduced to a written, pictorial, oral, or machine readable record. The code designations, which may consist of letters, numerals, and other symbols and which average 12 to 18 characters in length, provide information in 12 fields: type of material, source or author, date or edition, form and availability, unit identification number, copyright status or security classification, original language, translated language, status, subject or document identification code number, and subject classification or document numbers. The purposes of the coding system are to (1) eliminate delays and reduce costs for obtaining, processing, and distributing materials, (2) provide adequate compensation to those producing and distributing information and knowledge, (3) establish compatibility among information systems, and (4) support efforts of libraries, other institutions, and individuals storing and/or seeking information and knowledge. The appendices demonstrate the HUC system for identifying year and date, federal agencies, Congress, courts, states, major geographic areas, and U.S. publishers. Appendix C, the major portion of the document, lists classes of U.S. government publications with the corresponding HUC designations. According to the author's proposed system this document is identified 7 HIL 95-NUGF-2A. (CC)

A CODE FOR THE UNIQUE IDENTIFICATION OF RECORDED KNOWLEDGE AND INFORMATION

A code for the unique identification of recorded knowledge and information can perform an essential function both in new systems for the storage and retrieval of information and in the traditional field of library science. The problems presented by the flood of publications and the cost of providing essential information to those who need it demand a solution which will

1. eliminate delay, uncertainty, and frustration encountered by libraries, organizations, and individuals in obtaining material cited in books, journals, reports, bibliographies or in indexes of various types;
2. reduce costs to libraries and information services for acquisition, shelving, storage, handling, reproduction and distribution of books, journals, and reports;
3. provide adequate compensation to those engaged in the production and distribution of works providing knowledge and information;
4. establish a means of identifying knowledge and information designed to promote compatibility among automatic data processing and other types of information systems for exchanging information throughout the world; and
5. support the efforts of libraries, educational institutions, professional societies, government, business, research organizations, and individuals seeking specific items of knowledge and information by providing the means for improved indexing, citing, storage and retrieval of recorded knowledge and information.

Although knowledge and information are synonymous terms for a substantial amount of material, neither is all inclusive. Knowledge covers the realm of ideas and implies organized, synthesized and analyzed information. Information covers the other end of the spectrum of single, isolated facts but also includes reports, data, or pictures such as astronomic observations. Information can be anything that provides a clue to man's behavior such as notes, letters, records, and even fingerprints or that helps to describe the physical and social environment. Together these terms include everything which can be reduced to a written, pictorial, oral or machine readable record.

If a code is to contribute to the solution of problems created by the increasing complexity of society and the resulting information explosion, it must do more than uniquely identify recorded knowledge and information. It must identify those individuals and organizations having right to compensation for reproduction of material and for its use in information storage and retrieval systems.

In addition it should provide information about the material which would help researchers decide from the identification number alone, whether they wish it retrieved for perusal. This is important in a retrieval system that may produce citations in the thousands in response to a given query. The additional information is helpful to librarians in organizing and searching material to meet special need.

If the code were to be universally accepted and administered by an international public-private corporation, this would have great significance for study, research, communication, business, government and for international relations. Identical material would bear the same identification number in libraries of all types or in electronic data processing systems. This is in contrast to the present situation in which identical works may be identified by the call number of the Library of Congress card number, by some other subject classification, by accession number, by some bibliographic abbreviation, or by some source identification number as employed by the Government Printing Office.

Since the effectiveness of a system for unique identification of recorded knowledge and information depends upon the centralized maintenance of source and copyright owner identification numbers, some institution has to be created or entrusted with this task and also with the function of maintaining a complete file of all material for which code numbers have been assigned except classified government material or documents and manuscripts not available for citation. A public-private corporation would seem to offer the most satisfactory and flexible arrangement.

An international public-private corporation serves both to project and to protect the public interest and the political interests of the member states. At the same time, it does not subordinate the interests of authors, publishers, professional groups and others with vital economic interests in knowledge and information to an international bureaucracy run by governments and serving only political ends. A corporation having obligations to its stockholders, both governments and individuals would be in a better position to achieve an economic balance among interested groups than would an existing international organization. Its revenue would come from the fees collected for the reproduction of microfiche out-of-print material reproduced on demand, and from material in other media for which it serves as a repository. A portion of the fees collected would be paid to the publishers or copyright owners for reproductions made of material bearing the holders' numbers.

With this system national and international exchange and use of information would be facilitated. Libraries could supplement their book collections with microfiche, other forms of microimages, computer storage, video tape, and other forms of storing information, so that a researcher requesting a number of citations in an article would only have to wait a few moments at a library desk while the numbers of the citations are tapped out on a keyboard of a storage console. The information would instantly appear, or the machine would automatically order those that are not in the collection. The researcher could look at the material in a reader or on a video screen, select and copy those portions desired for further study and as an addition to his own collection. The machine which reproduces the material automatically record the code number on a tape. When it is full, the tape is taken to a computer service center where the entries are cumulated. The computer draws checks in favor of publishers indicating on each check the code number of the material reproduced for each author. The library receives one bill for reproduction and copyright payments. If the reproducing machines are coin operated by the visitors to the library, then there is no charge to the library account.

The code number serves as a short citation, an accounting device, a filing number for individuals as well as for libraries and institutions with large collections, and as a common language permitting computers in different countries to identify and to communicate with each other about material contained in their programs. A short citation is important to research. When coupled with the prompt availability of microfiche copy, much of the time and effort now spent in locating material can be devoted to improving the quality and to increasing the contribution of research. Imagine for example the problem of locating the citations under present research conditions of such works as The State of the Library Art edited by Ralph Shaw, Schumpeter's History of Economic Analysis, or D'Arcy Thompson's book On Growth and Form. With code number citations and the availability of microfiche in a central file such material could be at hand for research in any part of the globe. A code number citation is a help to authors as well as those interested in following an author's thought to his conclusions. Most writers hate to devote valuable time to the obvious, and references to well known journals, and those not so well known, fall into this category. As a result the different abbreviations used for some number, or the code number by itself, would improve use of citations and rapid retrieval by the reader. The use of microfiche would also facilitate the checking of quotations and would assure the accuracy of citations at the time of publication. With development of citation indexing, citations would occupy a more important role as a search device.

The heart of a system for providing compensation for the reproduction and use of literary material is the method of maintaining accounts. If much manual effort is involved, the system quickly becomes one of spending dimes to collect pennies. A system such as the one outlined here would spend mills to collect nickels for those having the right to compensation for the reproduction and use of their product. Although a nickel may not sound impressive, it represents a return, without additional cost, on the use of material now represented by library lending. With the expanding use of material and greater efficiency derived from new information systems, the nickels can be expected to be multiplied by many orders of magnitude.

There are three important aspects to copyright: the moral rights of the author to protect his name and reputation in the use of his work; the right of the author and publisher to compensation both for the use of a work and for access to it; and, finally, there is the right of all the people to access to knowledge and information that has been made available to some of the people through publication. It is in the area of access and compensation that many of the daily violations of copyright law occur. It is not that people are unwilling to pay in money for access to published material provided by inexpensive copying devices, but they are unwilling to pay in time, trouble, and energy demanded by the existing permissions procedures which are really designed to protect the moral rights of authors and to assure adequate compensation for further published use of material. In the interest of maintaining the sanctity of the law and of promoting the public interest, it is time to distinguish between compensation for published use and compensation for access. A unique code number facilitates this by permitting the development of accounting techniques that impose minimum requirements on users and provide accurate accounting of the compensation due publishers and authors.

If a code uniquely identifies all knowledge and information in accordance with certain principles, it can be used as a means of ordering both large and small collections. This is particularly true if the material is reduced to microfiche or other means of storage meeting accepted international standards. The use of this media identified by a universal code would be of immense value to libraries. It would greatly reduce the proportion of the total expenditure of libraries and information services devoted to the administrative costs of acquisition, shelving, storage, handling, reproduction, and distribution of the knowledge and information contained in books, journals, and reports. By providing book numbers as well as numbers for microfiche, aperture cards, computer tapes, etc., a universal code would reduce the costs of ordering and following up on new material in form of hard copy. With the availability of these media, the costs of locating and obtaining out-of-print material would be replaced by the much lower costs of ordering microfiche or tapping documentation centers for the desired items. Since all material would be identified by the unique code, the cataloging costs would be largely eliminated. The shelving, storage, handling, and reproduction costs of microfiche is much less than for books, although storage in other media, for example computer disc or cell, may be more expensive, the advantages may well offset the costs. Circulation would be replaced to a considerable extent by the copying of microfiche by library users or use of computer output. The low cost of microfiche and the elimination of the home or office storage problem would encourage readers to add to their own collection anything that they felt worth reading. The code number would provide both libraries and readers with different fields of information by which the microfiche could be filed. The reduction of administrative costs and of personnel required to collect and shelve books would permit libraries to devote more time and effort to their primary function of searching and organizing material to meet the specific needs of their clinetele.

With a unique code number, which publishing companies could in most cases assign, changes could be introduced into the production and distribution of knowledge and information that would tap additional sources of revenue for authors and publishers. By including the code number on each page of a book or magazine, publishers could improve permissions procedures and arrangements for compensation for reproduction of hard copy. Companies which set type by tape could sell copies of the tape to information services and receive continuing return according to the frequency of reference and use of the material in an information system. Publishers can include microfiche copies of their books and periodicals as part of the original sale to libraries and information services and receive reimbursement for copies made. While making material more readily available for research, a unique code and accounting system could be used to help select the wheat from the chaff. The search techniques for achieving this are under constant study, but the lack of comparability in identifying the material in the data base of different systems complicates the task. Not only would the code introduce uniformity in identifying the material in the data base, but it would also provide a wealth of material on frequency of use, locations of use, and in some cases the search path leading to use. The code suggested in this study is designed to organize and to identify material, so that computers, as well as humans, can reduce the margin for error in identifying specific items of knowledge and information.

The HUC, as it was termed when first used to identify microfiche at the International Conference on Water for Peace in May 1967, is structured to provide a maximum of information in a minimum number of alpha-numeric characters. It is designed to assure that, given a source and publisher number and a coding manual, different persons throughout the world would all assign the same number to an identical document. Since most material would have a source number, the HUC number could be readily applied, either by the source or a publisher, to documents and publications without the time consuming requirements of a central source query.

The HUC is a compressible code. It is divided into two parts. Taken together, they can identify 12 fields of information. The first part, consisting of the first 5 fields, serves, in most cases, to provide unique identification of a work or item of information. The exceptional cases are sources with large daily output. The second provides supplementary but useful information such as subject classification, language, document or patent numbers, copyright status, person or organization to whom copyright fees should be paid, distribution status and other items or information. The HUC in its entirety comprises 35 characters, but it is a variable length code which under present circumstances would never use all characters available. Some of the characters are a reserve to cover needs extending into the next couple of centuries. In most cases the citation or identification number would consist of 12 to 18 characters.

The 12 fields of the code are as follows:

1. Type of material -- 1 digit
2. Source -- 5 letters and 5 digits
3. Year and date, by month and day, or edition -- 4 letters
4. Form and availability of material from publisher -- 1 digit
5. Unit identification number, microfiche, etc. -- 3 letters
6. Copyright status or security classification -- 1 digit
7. Publisher or payee -- 3 letters and 2 digits
8. Original language or by major groups -- 1 letter
9. Translated language, if any -- 1 letter
10. Status of material (revision, amendment, reprint) -- 1 digit
11. Subject or document identification code number -- 1 digit
12. Subject classification or document numbers -- 2 letters and 4 digits

The HUC number actually used to identify a specific work or item of information would range from a minimum of 8 characters to a theoretical maximum of 35. The flexibility of the code is achieved by alternation letters and digits, so that computers can be programmed to search by the location of letters or digits in the code. The variable length of the code is an important consideration when code numbers up to the billions have to be recorded and when daily citations and references are taken into account.

The letters are supplemented by 9 symbols, asterisk, dagger, double dagger section, parallels, paragraph, and capital delta, sigma, and omega. These are used to provide a single character for the days of the month, for the additional letters required to transliterate Cyrillic and other alphabets, and for double letter equivalents from 0 to 999. The equivalent of these symbols in the American Standard Code for Information Interchange (ASCII) would be as follows:

* = asterisk *
% = dagger †
@ = double dagger ‡
= section §
$ = parallels ‖
¢ = paragraph ¶
? = capital delta Δ
! = capital sigma Σ
" = capital omega Ω

The equivalences of the letters and symbols to numbers up to 1,000 and to the characters in the Cyrillic alphabet are given in Appendix A. The use of a letter for each day of the month increases the efficiency of the third field of the code. The possibility of using 1 or 2 letters to equate to numerals from 0 to 999 means that the twelfth field of the code can carry the Universal Decimal Classification or the Dewey Decimal to four decimal places and can identify individually up to 10 million documents in a single series.

Each of the 12 fields, as discussed below, has its own structure and rationale. The HUC is developed on the principle that source, date, and unique identification of material by volume, microfiche, aperture card, tape reel, or cell storage and location within the unit of storage, for that source and date could provide unique identification within the universe of recorded knowledge and information. On this basis the last 7 fields could be eliminated in cases not involving copyright or restricted distribution.

Field 1, First digit -- Type of material

The initial division serves to multiply the author and source identification potential of the code by an order of six: individual authors or composers, multiple authors, corporate or institutional designations, U. S. federal and local sources, official sources of other countries, and international organizations. It does this by dividing the type of material into 10 categories as follows:

1. All published works by single authors
2. Works by multiple authors and edited works
3. Serials, newspapers, corporate publications and reports
4. U. S. official publications
5. Official publications of other countries
6. Documents and publications of international organizations
7. Manuscripts, preprints, reports, theses, papers, etc.
8. Drawings, plans, maps, photographs
9. Musical scores
0. All other types of information

In addition to expanding the identification of specific sources, the initial classification assists in the organization and processing of the material. It provides observable criteria for its allocation in a large organization. The initial classification can be ignored as a filing symbol if material is organized by subject classification or by any of the other fields of the code. Since the first two categories are largely contained in the National Union Catalog (NUC), the code can also provide the Library of Congress (LC) classification number for most material in these two categories. This permits a library to file material by author and source and by subject. The author file, for example, could be the permanent file from which copies could always be made, and the subject file could be available for reading or circulation.

The initial identification is of value in the retrieval of information. Most indexes would list available material in all groups. In these cases the initial identification would assist a reader or researcher in identifying the type of material desired for further examination. A citation beginning with 9 might not be of interest to a non-musician searching citations for historical research. Machines can also be programmed to reject certain categories of material.

Field 2, First letter and second digit series -- Author or source number

The identification of author or source can range from a minimum of 1 letter and 1 digit to a maximum of 5 letters and 5 digits. Corporations, organizations, and international institutions in categories 3, 6, and 8 in the first field are the only sources that would have the minimum of a letter and a digit identification symbol. The identification numbers of individual authors and composers would consist of 2 or more letters and 1 or more digits.

The identification of individual authors is based upon the first 2, 3, or 4 letters of the surname. For authors whose date of death is prior to 1920, only 2 letters are used. These are followed by digits to designate their alphabetical order in established catalogs or bibliographies. This division between authors before and after 1920 expands the identification capability of the code and indicates the historical time of a work. This is of importance when classics are reprinted in new editions with commentary. For example, Richard Cantillon's famous Essai sur la natur du commerce en general, which was published in 1755, is listed in the National Union Catalog as a book published in 1952. The code number for this book would indicate 1952 as the date of publication, but the 2 letters for the author would convey to anyone seeing the citation that the work was created prior to 1920. This distinction is also valuable in questions of copyright since some countries follow the principle of life of the author plus 50 years as the duration of copyright protection.

Authors whose date of death is subsequent to 1920 would be identified by the first 3 letters of the surname followed by digits in decimal form indicating their position in the NUC. Authors not in the NUC or in national bibliographies or catalogs of other countries at the time HUC numbers are assigned would be identified by the first 4 letters and decimal digits indicating their alphabetical order as compared with authors in the NUC. This approach permits the assignment of author source numbers at random in the NUC and to authors not therein listed. For any given three letter group of less than 100,000, this system will maintain alphabetical order based on numerical designation with the possibility of the same number being assigned to only three people who would be uniquely identified by the letter prefixes.

As an example, assume a 3 letter group with 120,000 entries of which 21,000 were deceased by 1920. The first entry would be designated by 2 or 3 letters of the surname followed by 00001. In this case the 2 letter entries would have the same numerical identification as the 3 letter entries. In another case of a group with only 10 entries, the first one would have only 1 following the alphabetical designation, and the 2, 3, and 4 letter entries would each have a different number according to the alphabetical position of the entry. To take a hypothetical case, assume John Xanadu deceased 1910, John Xanadu in the NUC and living after 1920, and son of the first John Xanadu, and finally the third John Xanadu first published in 1967. If Xanadu were the first entry in XAN, and XAN had 9 other name entries, their identification numbers would be XA09, XAN1, and XAND11. If XAN were to have more than 100,000 entries, the numbers assigned on the same assumption would be XA00001, XAN00001, and XAND00001. This arrangement should provide unique identification for authors to the year 2000. By then experience will decide the importance of alphabetical order as compared with need for coding efficiency.

Multiple authors would be identified by the initial of the surnames of each of the first five authors. Since they would have a difference first field number, these designations could duplicate those in other categories.

Category 3 of Field 1 identifies journals, periodicals, and corporate reports, documents and publications. Since the number of sources in this category are much fewer than single authors, certain blocks of numbers can be used to identify specific types of publications or primary functions of the source. A corporation whose primary function is other than publication would have numbers less than 5, 10-49, 100-499, 1000-4999, and 10000-49999. Corporations, enterprises, professional societies or organizations with the primary function of publication whether periodicals or newspapers would have the remaining numbers. Because of the greater efficiency of the code for this category, it would be possible further to sub-divide the numbers to identify types of sources as between newspaper publishers or other serial publishers.

Category 4 of Field 1 covers all U. S. publications and documents of Federal, State, and local governments. The structure of the code for this category follows, with some modifications, the classification developed by the Government Printing Office (GPO) shortly after the turn of the century. As noted by Mr. King, Chief Librarian of the Division of Public Documents, ". . . it has stood the test of time as a workable arrangement for publications of the United States Government, having been used for over 50 years." It does have the fundamental weakness of most classifications in that works of the same author may be classified in different places, but this can be easily overcome by HUC which permits the collection of all of the works of a single author under his source number. In such cases, the HUC number would indicate the category in which the work had been first issued without the author's source number. A government report prepared by a single author might then be available in both categories 1 and 4 of field 1.

Appendix B gives the two letter designation of the states, Federal Departments and agencies and principal organizations and commissions. In some case three letters are used to conform to the GPO designation.

Appendix C provides source numbers corresponding to all classes contained in the GPO list of July 1, 1966, and in addition designations for other documents. The basic designation consists of 2 letters. The next 1 or 2 letters provide the numerical equivalent for the federal government and county and city designations for states. If all 3 of the remaining letters in this field are utilized, over 30,000 subdivisions can be uniquely identified. In order to provide a clear distinction between federal and state material, all federal source digits, except X for the Congress, following the GPO designation are less than 500. Numbers 500 through 999 are reserved for states and municipalities. Mixed commissions, regional commissions, and any other group embodying state and federal interests or the interests of several states could be included under the basic designation of the first named state or of the federal department and specifically identified by a numbered category of 1,000 or more.

The structure of the code for this category of official U. S. publications is such that groups of numbers can be used to identify similar classes of materials. All laws, decisions, and court judgments would have the same digital groupings. These would be 502 through 515 for state and municipal jurisdictions, GSE107 through GSE111 for federal laws, and 2 through 11 for the decisions of the different Federal Courts. Since all source numbers in this category relate only to the United States, they can be duplicates of source numbers in other categories. This gives flexibility in the use of source letters and numbers in the identification of laws, regulations, and court decisions. Anyone using the HUC for official publications would be able to identify all state legislation by the numbers used in the source field. The same numbers with different letter prefixes could also be used for laws, decrees, and decisions in other countries. The remainder of the code following this field would describe the material specifically by number and date.

HUC treats congressional bills, documents, reports, and some specialized agencies differently from the classification of the Superintendent of Documents. In his arrangement, many of the specialized agencies are included under a general congressional category, and congressional bills, documents, and reports are not given a special place in the scheme of lettered symbols but are placed at the end of all other classifications and arranged by Congress, session, and individual number with abbreviations being used for the series title. In the suggested code, they would be identified in the X group.

The Committees of Congress are identified by three letters. The remaining two letters indicate the number of the Congress and the session. These are obtained by dividing this numerical equivalent by two. If it divides evenly, the result gives the Congress and indicates first session. If there is a remainder, it gives the Congress and indicates second session. EV, for example, indicated 90th Congress, second session. A special session would be indicated by a character without a numerical equivalent.

This arrangement permits resolution to retain their assigned number as part of the source. Thus House resolution 2431, 90th, 2nd would be identified as XHREV2431 with the next four characters indicating the year, month, and day of its introduction.

Subcommittees would be identified by numbers following the committee and congressional session. 4XHLEV3 designates subcommittee 3 of the House Judiciary Committee of the 90th Congress, 2nd session. Hearings and committee reports would be identified by data and microfiche or other storage medium numbers.

Archival material, which for the United States exceeds in volume the collection of the Library of Congress, can be incorporated into the code with the use of its existing classification system for material which has already been preserved on microfilm. One of its largest collections, represented by approximately 5,000 rolls of microfilm contains the records of the German Foreign Office. This collection would bear the HUC number 4GSERG242M#X4 DYI3G5T120. This number will uniquely identify each of the 5000 rolls by merely changing the letters of the third letter field. Although the code number looks long, it is both shorter and, by indicating the language, more informative than the citation, National Archieves, RG242, T120, 5,000 rolls.

An explanation of each part of the code reveals its structure. The 4 indicates that the category is the U.S. Government. GS is the identification used by the Superintendent of Documents for publications of the General Services Administration, which includes the National Archieves. The third letter, E, represents 4, the GPO designation for the National Archieves. The designation RG242 is the code assigned by the National Archieves to the record group for the World War II collection of seized enemy records. The second letter field is for the year, and specific date or edition. The X means that the date is the latest for the material in a collection covering a number of years prior to the year indicated by M in this field as 1945. The number 4 in the third number series signifies that the material is on roll microfilm. The third letter field, DYI indicates that there are 5,000 items in the collection. The next number, 3, is the symbol for material in the public domain. The G is for the language of the material, German. The 5 denotes that the following field contains a source identification number. That number, T120, is the microfilm series number assigned by the National Archieves to this particular collection.

Category 5 of the first field covers official publications of other countries. All documents having the force of law could be given the same group of numbers as indicated above for the United States. Patents might be number 25, and similar material would have identical numbers for all countries. Other than these requirements for identifying common types of material, the numbering system for other countries, as with the United States, would attempt to accommodate any identification system in current use within a country. Each country would be identified by 2 letters selected to identify their geographic location. The country designations are given in Appendix D.

The use of 2 letters for country identification leaves 3 letters for source identification within countries. These letters representing over 30,000 possibilities associated with the 5 digit series should be capable of meeting the needs of any country. A difficulty is presented by the allocation of only 1 letter for principal languages and language groups. This may present a problem for some countries with several official languages and many dialects. This can be solved by special coding requirements applicable to certain sources in category 5.

One problem for official government documents, and to a lesser degree for those of international organizations, involves security and the extent of distribution. HUC provides for the assignment of security classifications to documents. This permits the integration of classified material with other material in government files and for the use of the same basic identification number when these documents are subsequently released for historical or information purposes. At that time only the classification number needs to be changed. This is of great value to researchers who must now spend a considerable amount of time running through series of separate identification numbers often given to the same document or report number in order to establish the identity of documents issued in different forms.

The source number for category 6 of the first field would identify all international organizations, subdivisions, and type of documentation. With only minor changes, numbers already assigned to documents by the United Nations and other international organizations could be incorporated in the code. By use of the ninth field, the code could accommodate the problem posed by documents currently issued as revisions and amendments. If microfiche were used as the primary medium, amendments and revisions could be included with a reissue of the original document at no extra cost. Since microfiche can be easily airmailed to capitals at a great saving over original documents, the availability of documents in microfiche form and coded as part of a general information system would greatly increase the efficiency of the documentation system of international organizations.

The seventh category of the first field will eventually become the one with the largest number of source numbers. Its source numbers have to be consistent with those of the first three categories of the first field. Since it includes manuscripts and theses, the sources in this category may not appear in the first three categories. On the other hand authors and sources identified in the first categories in most cases will have preprints or drafts of material to be circulated for comment prior to publication. Older authors may also be represented in this category by unpublished manuscripts of historical interest. When the material is reproduced in other forms, the code would indicate that the material is similar in substance to material identified in other categories of the first field.

Field 3, Second letter series --
Year of production, and Date, by month and day, or Edition

This field is represented by four letters. The first 2 letters identify precisely the year of production or date of book, monograph, report, letter, manuscript or whatever the type of document, for those produced between 1500 and 2500. Documents dated prior to 1501 would be indicated as A. Since this is roughly the period of the Gutenberg revolution, this date will permit the identification of practically all printed works by year of production up to the the twenty-sixth century.

For documents with precise dates the third letter indicates the month and the fourth the day. For serial publications, this field number contains one ambiguity since the month or quarter would be identical for March or Spring, D; June or Summer, G; September or Autumn, J; and December or Winter, M. For books which do not have precise dates, this field would indicate the edition of the book. N would be first edition following in order with subsequent editions. If an author were to have two books published in the same year, this field could be used to differentiate as well as identify the edition of the work.

If there is only one letter in this field, it indicates a year from 1500 to 1531. Two letters alone indicate year of work with specific date or edition unknown. Three or 4 letters provide the month, edition, the month and day, or other information as indicated in the following examples; BB - January 1, MZ - December 25, E - April, N - First edition, NA - Tenth edition, NB - Eleventh edition, W - Year of work estimated, X - Material varying period identified by latest date, Y - Second published work in same year by same author without specific date, Z - Third published work, YA - Fourth published work. When X is used with another letter, it signifies that the time period covered by the dates of the material does not exceed 12 months and that the second letter designates the most recent month in which the material was issued.

Field 4, Third digit series -- Form and availability of material and reference for Field 5

This field of 1 digit indicates the form and availability of material. If the code terminates with field 3, it is assumed that the material is available on microfiche, is in the public domain, and is in English or in the language of the country designated in the second field in category 5 of field 1. The digits in this field convey the following information:

1. Microfiche prepared from available copy,
2. Readable copy issued by publisher or source,
3. Readable copy, microfiche, and computer tape available from publisher or source,
4. Roll microfilm prepared from available copy,
5. Aperture cards,
6. Computer data and programs available from source only on magnetic tape or other form of computer input, field 5 identifies reel numbers or other units
7. Field 5 identifies special source units of storage unique to source.

Field 5, Third letter series -- Copy or Unit number

The three letters and symbols of this field are sufficient to identify uniquely over 30,000 microfiche, microfilm rolls, aperture cards, magnetic tapes, or other forms of original copy. A book, report, serial publication, or other type of document would be identified by the letter A. A, for example, would designate the complete work. If a work were contained on a single microfiche, it would be designated A. If more than one microfiche were required they would be designated as B = 1, C = 2, etc. Designation of rolls, reels, and aperture cards, following the numbering system in Appendix A, would start with B, if not complete on one unit of storage. Specific citations to pages in a book would be to the microfiche for those pages rather than to the letter A used as identification for the book. This would permit a researcher to accumulate only those portions of a work which are of interest.

Field 6, Fourth digit -- Copyright status

The copyright status is indicated by 1 digit covering the following possibilities:

1. Material copyrighted with the publisher or producers receiving payments for reproduction of microcopy or use in an information system.

2. Material copyrighted with the author or source receiving payments for reproduction of microcopy or use in information systems.

3. Material in the public domain.

4. Administratively controlled material by governments, international organizations, or private individuals or institutions, not available to the public unless cited in a published work.

5. Material subject to security classification lowest grade.

6. Material subject to security classification limited group.

7. Material subject to security classification on individual need-to-know basis.

8. Copyright status not established.

9. Fees, rights and permission controlled by an agent.

If the code number stops with the fifth field, then the material is known to be in the public domain. If this is the last field, the work is in the English language or in the official language of the country indicated in the second field of category 5 of field 1.

Field 7, Fourth letter and fifth digit series -- Publisher or Payee

Three letters and 2 digits are reserved for the identification of the publisher or copyright payee if different from the author or source. The corporate symbols would be used where possible. In other cases the most common 1, 2, or 3 letters of the abbreviation would be utilized.

Fields 8 and 9, Fifth letter series -- Languages

Two letters are used to identify languages, thus the original and the language of the translation can both be indicated. With over a thousand languages and dialects, it is evident that 35 characters can identify only principal languages and language groups. All of the different versions of Chinese are included as a group as are the 14 official Indian languages.

If only one letter is used, it is for field 8 and field 9 is omitted. The one letter indicates the language of the work. For a translated work, the second letter, field 9, would be used with field 8 to designate both the original language and the language of the translation reproduced by the microfiche or in the identified work. An * in field 9 indicates a publication in several languages, or articles or summaries in different languages.

Field 10 and 11, Sixth digit series -- Special Information

These fields are represented by two digits. If used for category 1 of field 1, the first number would indicate the category of the previous publication. For example, a reprint by an author of material previously published as a dissertation would carry number 7. If it is a reprint of a book without substantial alteration or a new book not previously included in the code, there would be reprints from contributions to journals or to works edited by others, the most common representation in this field for category 1 would be 2 or 3. The use of microfiche for reprints permits the collection of all works of an author into a single source file, for his own records and as an aid for other researchers who wish to review the works of particular individuals in a field at the initiation of an investigation. At the same time by indicating previous publication, it may help to avoid duplication in the acquisition or investigation of material.

For category 1, field 10 would have designations 2 through 7. If a subject classification were employed, this would be indicated in field 11. Number 1 would designate Library of Congress, classification, 2 the universal decimal classification, and 3 the Dewey decimal system. Thus a reprint of an article might have a 3 in field 10 and a 1 in field 11.

In case of a work, not in English, in category 1 for which there is no subject classification, fields 10, 11, and 12 would be omitted. In categories 3, 4, 5, and 6, field 12 might designate either (1) volume and number of a journal, or (2) document or patent number. In these cases a 7 in field 11 would indicate the former and an 8 the latter. Appendix E indicates the meaning of the numbers in these fields.

For documents of international organizations in category 6, the field for special information indicates the revisions and amendments to original documents. For example, a document issued by the United Nations Economic and Social Council might have the following sequence, presented by a delegation, amended, issued as a revised document, sent to the General Assembly, amended, revised, and adopted. Assuming that the original number is 456, the code number might be 6UES1NTBB2A3E8E456; the amendment would be 6UES1NTBK2A3E1E456; the revised version would be 6UES1NTBM2A3E18E456. If subsequent revisions were made they would be numbered seriatim, 28, 38, etc. When issued as a General Assembly document, assuming the number to be 566, it might be identias 6UGA1NTCB2B3E8A566. These are hypothetical examples, but they serve to show the use of the code. Under present procedures, if this document were to be issued as a sales document, it would bear the three identifying symbols, the Economic and Social Council number, the General Assembly number, and the sales number. Here the sales number could be the same as the final document number since it would be available on microfiche. Its identification as a sales document would be in the source number. If the sales copy were augmented by an introduction, new material, or better reproduction, it could bear a revision and a sales source number.

The sales number of this document might then be 6UGA222NTDB2C2EF28EA566. The significance of these characters is as follows: Field 1, 6--international organizations; field 2, UGA--United National General Assembly, and 222--designation of the sales department; field 3, NTDB--1967, March 1; field 4, 2, issued by source in readable copy and microfiche; field 5, C--indicates 3 microfiche or 120 to 180 pages attributable to additional material or better typographic reproduction; field 6, 2--copyrighted by source; field 7--omitted because of 2 in field 6; fields 8 and 9, EF--English original, published in French translation; fields 10 and 11, 28--second revision of document (amendments are indicated by a single digit, 1, 2, 3, etc.); and field 12, EA566--both Economic and Social Council and General Assembly document bearing the GA number 566.

The HUC number can also be applied to other types of material which should be available to members, organizations, and to individuals interested in the United Nations. For example, the reports providing detailed data for feasibility studies often contain valuable and essential information for consideration of other projects or programs or for better understanding of the physical and social environment of an area. Yet they are too bulky and have such a limited audience that reporduction in paper copy is not justified. Here microfiche or roll microfilm provides the answer. As a source number they might have a special agency number allocated to feasibility studies and background. Assuming this to be the case, a hypothetical number for roll microfilm might be 6UDP15NTC4A3E98A125. This would identify the United Nations Development Program by the characters 6UDP. The number 15 could be reserved for feasibility studies. NTC4A3E establishes the date of preparation of the original document as February 1967 and indicates that it is available on 1 roll of microfilm or 11, and it establishes that the material is in the public domain and is in the English language. The rest of the code indicates that the unit is not microfiche and that this study is 125 in a series.

Field 12, Sixth letter and seventh digit series -- Subject or Document Number

The subject or document number is composed of 2 letters and 4 digits. This field permits the use of the subject classification of the Library of Congress. By converting the letters to numerical equivalents from 0 to 1,000, as shown in Appendix A. it can identify the universal decimal classification or the Dewey decimal system to 4 decimal places. Since subject classifications presently find their greatest use in identifying the subject content of books, monographs, pamphlets or reprints, the subject classification would most generally be used for categories 1 and 2 of field 1.

For the other categories of the first field, this field serves to identify volume and journal numbers, document numbers, and publication numbers. The flexibility of this field permits the incorporation of many existing identification systems into a universal one. It can serve, for example, to identify the patents of various countries. If countries were to use their country symbol and 25 for patents, the work of patent researchers would be simplified. They could ascertain readily from the code number if citations referred to other patents or different source material.

The code has the great virtue that it can be assigned in most cases by publishers as soon as they decide to accept a manuscript. They can then use this field for their work or publication number. Since the number can be used as an order number and citation number, advance publicity and identification for reviewing, not to speak of advance ordering, should be facilitated. When the book is published or a journal is distributed to subscribers, a copy or microfiche master can be sent to the central depository where it will always be available for reporduction. The code numbers can be printed on each page with the page number. This is an aid to single page copying and to the permissions process for quotation and use in further publication. When used in this fashion and included on magnetic tapes for information storage and retrieval systems, the HUC number assures the unique identification of the work and provides the basis for compensation to the source and publisher both for access to microcopy and for reproduction and use in other systems.

APPENDIX A

FIELD 3, THE SECOND LETTER SERIES IDENTIFIES THE YEAR OF PRODUCTION, E DATE, BY MONTH AND DAY, OR THE EDITION. THIS FIELD IS REPRESENTED BY FOUR TTERS. THE FIRST TWO LETTERS IDENTIFY PRECISELY THE YEAR OF PRODUCTION OR TE OF A BOOK, MONOGRAPH, REPORT, LETTER, MANUSCRIPT, ETC. FOR THOSE ODUCED BETWEEN THE YEAR 1501 AND 2500. DOCUMENTS PRODUCED PRIOR TO 1501 ULD BE INDICTED AS A.

THE ONE THOUSAND YEAR PERIOD IS INDICATED BY THE TWO LETTER EQUIVALENTS THE NUMBERS SPECIFIED IN THE FOLLOWING TABLE. THE MONTHS AND DAYS ARE DICATED BY THE LETTER EQUIVALENTS TO 12 AND 31 RESPECTIVELY. THUS OCTOBER 15, 67 HAS THE LETTER EQUIVALENT OF NTKP

ALPHABETICAL CHARACTERS AND SYMBOLS USED ON COMPUTER KEYPUNCH TO EXTEND THEIR RANGE TO 35 CHARACTERS AND THEIR NUMERICAL EQUIVALENCE WITH THE EQUIVALENT RUSSIAN CHARACTERS ARE SET FORTH BELOW. RESOLUTIONS WILL BE IDENTIFIED BY THE LETTER "R" AS FOLLOWS: "4XHR" FOR HOUSE RESOLUTIONS, "4XSR" FOR SENATE ONES, AND "4XJR" FOR THOSE ISSUED JOINTLY. APPENDIX F

THIS APPENDIX PROVIDES TWO AND THREE CHARACTER IDENTIFICATION FOR MOST OF THE PUBLISHERS IN THE UNITED STATES. FOR COMPLETE IDENTIFICATION, THESE CHARACTERS WILL BE FOLLOWED BY ONE OR TWO DIGITS. PUBLISHERS WITH VARIOUS SUBDIVISIONS MIGHT PREFER TO HAVE SEVERAL DIGITS WITH A COMMON CHARACTER IDENTIFICATION. THIS WOULD FACILITATE THE PROGRAMING OF THE COMPUTER FOR PAYMENT AND COLLECTION OF FEES FOR THE USE OF COPYRIGHTED MATERIAL.IDENTIFICATION OF PUBLISHERS AND INSTITUTIONS WHICH ARE ALSO PRODUCERS OF INFORMATION WILL REQUIRE DISCUSSION WITH INTERESTED PARTIES BEFORE A DEFINITIVE PROPOSAL CAN BE MADE. THE IDENTIFICATION SUGGESTED IN THIS APPENDIX IS ADVANCED AS A BASIS FOR SUCH DISCUSSION.
